

Lani is an environmental planner trained at Portland State University in Portland, Oregon; a brimming example of sustainability.

She is a passionate environmentalist who seeks to provide affordable, attainable and practical sustainable options for businesses and Barbadians alike. She loves the outdoors and worked with the National Park Service as a ranger in Canyonlands National Park, Moab as well as Graeme Hall Nature Sanctuary, Barbados. Her passion for the outdoors started her on a path studying environmental studies and culminated with a masters in Environmental Planning. Throughout her studies she was also very involved in community gardens and service-learning projects.

As an environmental professional she is also constantly seeking ways to assist our island in implementing sustainable practices and regenerative designs and has consulted with Sustainable Barbados Recycling Centre, The Future Centre Trust, The Travel Foundation, Town and Country Development Planning Office, The Prime Minister's Planning Unit among others.

On weekends you can find Lani and her son Sage enjoying the beach or hiking along the coast or inland exploring and enjoying the benefits of the great outdoors.
